2) This procedure necessarily involves much delay owing to the necessity for obtaining a large number of printed copies for a simultaneous distribution. The Correspondents attending the Press Room have been complaining that the news get belated and often reach them and their editors long after they become public property. This delay could only be avoided by sending to the Press Room a typed or manuscript copy of the order immediately on its issue and attending to the large distribution (to the several Editors) later on. This course also may not be quite satisfactory for the reason that all Editors have no correspondents here, and that such of them as have already heard of the Govt. communications through their correspondents would find the matter rather stale for a period or fuller publication. It however, seems the lesser of the two evils and may be tried for a time, leaving the Editors to arrange with the correspondents at Bangalore for the prompt communication to them of all news placed on the Table here.
